via Zoom

A City in Protest event

Registration: <https://hksi.ubc.ca/events/event/roundtable-national-security-law/>

The decision by the National People's Congress to introduce a national security law in Hong Kong has generated strong reactions both within the special administrative region and far beyond. Why is the proposed law deemed necessary by some but viewed with deep concerns by others? How would the proposed law affect the ways of life of the people in Hong Kong? And how would the proposed law reconfigure Hong Kong's long-standing status as an international hub? Finally, what implications does the introduction of the proposed law have for countries such as Canada?

Panelists:

Albert Hung-yea Chen, University of Hong Kong

Wilson Leung, Temple Chambers

Jie Cheng, University of British Columbia

Pitman Potter, University of British Columbia
